SYLLABUS	-	-		-	-			481

P R E F A C E.

THE present volume contains the continuation of the Syllabus of Rymer's Fœdera from the first year of the reign of Richard II., A.D. 1377, down to 1654, the year in which that invaluable collection ends.

Extent of the Second Volume of the Syllabus.

In the preface to the First Volume I expressed my intention to examine critically the materials which had been added to Rymer's Collection in the Record Commission Edition, and to supply the deficiencies, as well as to correct the errors, that were to be found in the three previous editions. When I announced that intention, I was not fully aware of the magnitude of the task. I have since devoted many months to the examination of the new matter, and have collected ample materials for the purpose of carrying out my view, but I refrain from making them public, from a repugnance to oppress the reader with tedious details. I must, therefore, content myself with pointing out such shortcomings in the Record Commission Edition as are calculated either to mislead the student or to embarrass the inquirer. The reader, however, must not imagine that the instances here adduced exhaust the subject; there is in fact scarcely a document that has been added to Rymer's first volume in which there is not an error of some description, more or less grave.

Intended examination of the Record
Commission
Edition.

It would lead to a disquisition much longer than would be desirable, were I to enter into a detail of the particulars in which the Record Commission Edition fails to be an improvement upon the former editions, or to enumerate the many points in regard to which the expectations of those who have had occasion to consult it have been disappointed. Many persons have had just reason to complain of the negligence and inconsistency of its orthography and punctuation, as well as of its minor shortcoming, the want of respecting it.

typographical uniformity;¹ others of the great inaccuracy of its dates, and the faulty arrangement of its materials. On the other hand it is only fair to say that some have been found to eulogize it in unqualified terms of approbation. Opposing opinions as to its faults and its excellencies will doubtless continue to exist, despite the remarks which I feel bound to make on the present occasion.

Difference between Rymer's Edition and that of the Record Commission.

Before venturing on particulars it is necessary to point out the difference between Rymer's own Edition and that of the Record Commission.

Perhaps there are few works of the same nature, certainly none of the same magnitude, in which so few of its component parts can fairly be censured. It must, however, be allowed that exceptions may be taken to many of the pieces Rymer has introduced, as being of minor importance, and inconsistent with what seems to have been his original plan; but, regarding such articles as part of a whole, and in connexion with those which precede or follow them, the objection is of no great moment, turned though it has since been to a bad account; as furnishing a precedent to a future editor. Indeed Rymer himself was evidently conscious that some might consider certain articles admitted by him into his compilation as of little importance. In his address to the reader prefixed to his first volume, he remarks, "If some matters are here inserted which appear of minor importance and unworthy of being printed, before you rashly reject them remember the Cock of Æsop."

Whence Rymer derived his materials.

With some exceptions, Rymer made his selections from contemporaneous records, the authenticity of which cannot be challenged.² The information they afford is of infinitely greater value than the statements of the annalist, which are seldom more than the common rumour of the day, added to or diminished according to the judgment or credulity of the writer; whereas the records on which Rymer mostly relied are the solemn registrations of acts by persons

¹ In a great portion of the documents which have been added, especially in the first volume, many of the abbreviated forms of words are retained, with the use of an apostrophe instead of an extension of the word; such, for instance, as Ep'o for Episcopo, Angl' for Anglia, West' for Westmonasterium, fil' for filius, Sc'e for Sanctæ, dat' for data and datum, id' for idus, cancellar' for cancellarius, habend' & tenend' for habendum et tenendum. Proper names, both Christian and surnames, share the same fate; as Warin' fil' Ger', W. Elien' ep., R. com' de Mell'. &c. is constantly used for et cætera, even when the words occur in full in the Record. Besides this the diphthongs æ and æ are arbitrarily disregarded, whether the matter is obtained from records or printed books; thus in one page thirteen instances of the single vowel occur while there are about the same number with the double vowel occupying its place.

² See further on this subject at p.

properly appointed to perpetuate such facts. The accuracy of what they record cannot be doubted. They often correct, always illustrate, and frequently confirm the narrative of the chroniclers. No greater proof of the truth of this can be advanced than the fact, that during the eventful struggles which preceded the Civil war and the Revolution, all the arguments, by which the attacks upon the liberties of the subject were resisted or supported, were carefully adduced from the muniments of the kingdom, and not from its chronicles; both parties confidently appealed—not to abstract reasoning, but to the roll or membrane—to the very letter of the law—in justification of their several acts. Hence it has been not inaptly said that “England owes more to the glory of the pen than to the sword, more to the vellum than to the banner, more to the judge than to the baron.”

Armed with the royal authority, Rymer had access, though not without restrictions, to the public muniments at that time deposited in the Tower of London, the Chapter House of Westminster Abbey, and the various repositories belonging to the Exchequer.¹ He rarely used foreign collections;² occasionally he has resorted to the ancient chroniclers of England. He, however, makes no allusion to this fact in his address to the reader. He merely says, “In this collection there is before you, and for the most part from authentic sources, much information which you would expect to learn, but will search for in vain, in the pages of our historians. You will here find abundantly unfolded to your view those ancient memoirs which were concealed from the knowledge of the writers of contemporary history.” The introduction of matter from these annalists is the principal blot in Rymer’s work; but something ¹ Dr. Clarke, speaking on this subject (MS. Rep. p. 287), says “Mr. Rymer’s sources appear to be of three descriptions: (i.) well known; (ii.) but lately known; (iii.) utterly unknown.” This assertion will be presently noticed.

² It is evident from two or three instances that Rymer sought supplementary materials abroad. Two documents concerning the duel to be fought between the Kings of Aragon and Sicily in 1282 (Vol. II., pp. 226–230, and pp. 230–234) have these references, “Ex archivo Reg. Palensi” and “Ex archivo Episcopi Albiensis.” In his first volume, p. 688, there is a convention between Henry III. and Louis IX. dated in 1259, the French text of which is accompanied with a Latin translation in parallel columns, thus headed, “Ex quodam Transcripto Archiepiscopi Burdegal, inter alia, hanc Conventionem habemus Latine redditam hisce verbis.” There is another piece also which has the appearance of having been derived from abroad. It is the convention made in 1193 between Philip II. King of France and John, then Earl of Moreton, afterwards King of England. Rymer, however, may possibly have taken it from the “Codex Diplomaticus,” of Leibnitz, where it is printed.

may still be said in extenuation, and some remarks to that effect will be found in the preface to the first volume.¹

Extent of Rymer's collection.

Rymer commenced his collection with the reign of Henry the First, and brought it down to July 1586.

Extent of Sanderson's
continuation.

After his death Robert Sanderson, his assistant, a man scarcely equal to the task, continued the work down to 1654, in which year the Fœdera ends, with the twentieth volume.²

The whole compilation, therefore, included a period of 553 years.

The second edition of the Fœdera.

The second edition, superintended by Sanderson and George Holmes,³ was little more than a reprint of the original work, with corrections by the latter. It was commenced printing in 1727 and completed in 1735.

Though this second edition professes to be "summa fide collata et emendata," yet it will be found, on a careful examination, to possess many points of inferiority to the first edition. There has not been added a single instrument, nor even the few "Omissa" which Rymer had supplied, (in an Appendix) included in their proper places.

The Hague
Edition.

The third, or Hague Edition, was begun in 1737 and finished in 1745.

Peculiarities
of the three editions.

The peculiarities of these three editions, having been fully described in my preface to the First Volume (p. xcvi), need not be further enlarged upon.

The Record
Commission
Edition.

The fourth edition was that published by the Record Commission. To illustrate the difference between it and the preceding editions, it is necessary to give a brief résumé of what I advanced in the preface to the first volume. A Select Committee of the House of Commons having been appointed in the year 1800 to inquire into the state of the Public Records of the Realm, they presented their report to the House on the 4th of July 1800. Upon the foundation of that report an address of the House was presented to His Majesty George III., praying him to command that such steps should be taken, as he should think fit, to carry out the subject of the prayer of the House

¹ At p. xlv. will be found a list of those pieces which Rymer excerpted from the ancient chronicles, amounting to 34, while those of a like nature introduced by Dr. Clarke are no fewer than 89.

² The last instrument with a date is a news letter from Paris of March 22d, 1654. After that there are two others without dates, but their contents shew that they were written some time in the course of the same year.

³ Holmes seems to have only superintended the republication of twelve volumes. The re-impression of the other eight is attributed to Sanderson.

of Commons. A Royal Commission was thereupon issued under the royal sign manual. Among the measures, which that commission gave authority to execute, was one which the Select Committee of the House of Commons had especially recommended, viz., a continuation of Rymer's Fœdera. The Select Committee reported that the State Papers published in Rymer's Fœdera, commencing "in the year 1134,¹ do not come lower in date than the first six years of Charles II., during the Usurpation, and that it was desirable to have this work completed by a supplementary selection of such other important papers as were omitted by the original compilers, and also to have it continued to the Revolution, or even to the accession of the House of Hanover."

The commissioners, appointed by royal authority for the execution of the measures recommended by the House of Commons, bestowed early attention on the Fœdera; but their great difficulty was to find a person competent to undertake what the House of Commons had recommended. Mr. Samuel Lysons and other antiquaries having declined the offers of the commissioners, several years elapsed before they were able to meet with any one, whom they considered qualified for the editorship of the work. They had the mortification on no less than four occasions to record their want of success.² At length, on the 25th of March 1808, nearly eight years after the commission was issued, the secretary reported to the board that Dr. Adam Clarke, on account of his extreme learning and indefatigable industry, had been recommended as a fit person to undertake the work.³ Having been accepted as editor by the commissioners, he was requested to read the Essay which he had written on the best mode of carrying into effect a compilation to form a supplement and continuation of Rymer's Fœdera.⁴ The Essay was approved, and he was thereupon directed to prepare two schemes, one for the first volume of a supplement and the other for a first volume of a continuation to the Fœdera, in accordance with the recommendation of the Select Committee of the House of Commons.

Difficulties of the Record Commissioner in finding an editor.

Dr. Adam Clarke appointed.

His Essay on the Fœdera.

² See Minutes of the Record Commissioners of 16 Sept. 1806, 23 March, 21 July, and 16 Dec. 1807.

³ On the 27th of February 1808, Mr. John Caley, secretary to the Record Commission, directed Dr. Clarke to "prepare an Essay on the best mode of carrying into effect a compilation to form a supplement and continuation to Rymer's Fœdera, for the inspection of the Commissioners.

⁴ The Essay bears date the 18th of March 1808, and is the first of the four reports which are published in the General Report of the Commissioners on the Public Records in 1812 (pp. 115-123).

Dr. Clarke's first scheme may be divided under three heads;—but he must be allowed to speak for himself, inasmuch as exception will be taken to much that he has advanced.

He condemns Rymer for commencing his work in 1101.

“ Few, who have consulted the Fœdera, have thought that Mr. Rymer commenced his work at the most proper period. Neither the year 1101, nor the accession of Henry I., constitutes any remarkable era in our annals or history; he should at least have gone back as far as the Norman Conquest in 1066. This is a remarkable era; none, indeed, more so, previously to the Revolution; it brought about changes, the influence of which has been felt through every period of our history, from that time to the present day.

“ Should it be said ‘ that we cannot in general depend upon the ‘ authenticity of the different instruments which occur prior to the ‘ accession of Henry I.,’ it may be answered, that we have a great variety of documents previously to that time, the authenticity of which cannot be questioned; and several others, which though not indubitably genuine, may be proved to stand on as fair a ground as many in the Fœdera. It is true, that by statute of Westminster, 3 Edw. I. c. 89, the year 1189, or the first year of Richard I., is assigned as the commencement of the legal term, defined within the time of memory; but this certainly cannot be understood as stigmatizing with uncertainty the accounts we have of previous transactions; had this been so understood, and had the Fœdera been constructed upon this definition, some of the most important and valuable of its materials had never seen the light. And if all prior to that time were to be considered dubious or uncertain, many important articles in the Fœdera, and in our ancient historians, as well as numerous important laws, must be rejected as presumptively spurious. Even Père Har-doin, the most fastidious of chronological critics, would enter his protest against such a conclusion.

“ With the utmost deference then, and perfectly under correction, I submit the opinion, that the supplement to Rymer, projected by the right honourable the commissioners, should embrace not only the period of time which that work comprehends, but also the time antecedent to it, at least from the Norman Conquest. If legitimate materials can be procured to fill up the chasm, as well as that from the 2nd of Henry I. in 1103, to the second after the accession of Stephen in 1137, it will be a consummation devoutly to be wished.

“ There is no paper in the Fœdera for any of these periods. The first indeed, does not come within the time it comprehends. At any rate, it can neither injure nor retard the undertaking, to collect, in the course of search for other materials, all that seems to be proper to fill up the chasm, from the Norman Conquest to the accession of Henry I. These may be carefully examined according to the rules of diplomatic criticism; the uninteresting and spurious rejected, and those worthy of the work inserted in their proper places.”

In his further reports Dr. Clarke has made the following remarks on the same subject¹:—“ That the collection should commence at so late a period as the accession of Henry I. could, in my opinion, never have been the design of the original projector; for as he wished that all papers and instruments which were curious and useful for the illustration of the English history, should form a part of the great aggregate collection, so he must have designed that the work should ascend at least to the termination of what may be called our fabulous times, and take in every authentic instrument, whether Saxon or Latin, that might cast even one steady ray of light on the subject. Why Mr. Rymer should not have done this we may readily conjecture, and conjecture, too, with the most plausible appearance of truth. It would have consumed much time, and have been extremely laborious and perplexing. I feel, in some respects, competent to deliver an opinion on this subject, from the difficulties I have experienced in the researches I have made in the period preceding the accession of King Stephen, or rather of Henry II., when the Fœdera may be properly said to commence; as there are only seven papers in the reign of Stephen, and only two in the long reign of Henry I., where it professes to begin. In both these reigns several documents of considerable importance will be found in the collection now in hand.”

Much could be said in answer to Dr. Clarke's remarks, repeated by him in several places; but it will probably suffice if I observe in reply, that Rymer commenced his work with the earliest political document found on record in this country, Domesday Book, of course, excepted. He had explored every source at his command and within his knowledge. The reason for his not beginning earlier was not that which Dr. Clarke apologetically assigns, viz., that

Exculpation of Rymer.

¹ Dated 13 May 1809 and 15 March 1810.

“ it would have consumed too much time, and have been extremely laborious and perplexing,” but that he could not discover any document appropriate to his purpose of an earlier date than the one he gave to the world as the first article in compilation. Rymer was employed in gathering his materials more than eleven years before he commenced printing; and it is clear, from what has been reported of him by eye-witnesses, that want of zeal and laborious painstaking could not, with any justice, be attributed to him.¹ It is a fact beyond dispute that he left behind him, in addition to what he has printed, more materials than Dr. Clarke and his assistants ever collected. Had Rymer discovered any important matter of an earlier date than 1101, it is folly to suppose that he would have rejected it. Even the most diligent are liable to commit an oversight; but Rymer, though severely tested on this point, has not been found wanting. It must be remembered that he had not the records at any of the public repositories unreservedly at his command, and he could only use those which were brought to him. The surprise in fact is, that Rymer, with nothing in the shape of index, scarcely an inventory, to guide him, has done so much; not that he has done so little. But what has Dr. Clarke done to supply the omissions of which he complains? He has printed fourteen articles of the reign of William I., and four of the reign of William II., not one of which ought properly to have been inserted in the Fœdera. Thus Dr. Clarke, for the 34 years which he condemns Rymer for passing over, was not able, with all his diligence, to communicate to the world more than eighteen documents, to fill the chasm between the Norman Conquest and the year 1101; and not one of those he has given, be it remembered, is a treaty or convention earlier than the first supplied by Rymer, Forgetting the apology he had already assigned for what he terms Rymer’s “negligence,” Dr. Clarke offers another reason why Rymer commenced the work with the year 1101.² “ I am led to the conclusion,” he says, “ that Rymer’s plan was originally to publish “ regal and public acts only, and such as he found sealed or other“ wise unequivocally authenticated; and this was probably the “ reason why he commenced the work with the first year of the

Why he commenced his work in 1101.

Dr. Clarke’s additions to Rymer.

¹ It is an undoubted fact that Rymer collected and arranged by himself the whole of the fifteen volumes which appeared under his editorship. He does not acknowledge to have seen any previous plan, or to have had any digests, tables, or calendars to facilitate his researches. See my remarks on this subject in the Preface to the First Volume of the Syllabus.

² In Report dated 13 May 1809.

“ reign of Henry I. ; as prior to that period he found no sealed “ public instruments, and probably few or none such existed.” This apology, it must be stated, was offered after Dr. Clarke had himself found that he was not able to bring forward a single proof of Rymer’s “ negligence.”

Little more than a year had elapsed after Dr. Clarke had issued the Essay, from which the above copious extracts have been taken, when he appears to have changed the opinions he had expressed relative to the supplement and continuation which the Select Committee of the House of Commons had recommended ; and he now brings forward another scheme, which is nothing less than a new edition of the Fœdera, upon a more scientific and methodical arrangement. I need not recapitulate his arguments, as I have entered fully into the question in the Preface to the First Volume of the Syllabus (p. ciii).

Dr. Clarke recommends a new edition of the Fœdera, instead of a supplement and continuation.

The Record Commissioners were indisposed for some months to entertain Dr. Clarke’s proposition, but in a report dated 15th March 1810 he pressed it upon them more strongly than before. He concludes with these words, “ I now look up to “ their decision ; it shall be law to me, and for ever lay the “ question at rest.” This last appeal to the commissioners effected Dr. Clarke’s object. They gave way, and authorised him, on the 24th of March 1810, to proceed with this new edition, now the subject in course of examination.

The Commissioners authorize him to proceed with a new edition.

The deficiencies imputed by Dr. Clarke to Rymer’s Edition, and which his new edition was intended to remove, come under three heads ; viz, (1) defectiveness of the publication ; (2) the unimportance and dubiousness of many of the documents he has printed ; (3) the impropriety of inserting others in the collection. Under each of these heads it will be necessary to say a few words.

His charges against Rymer’s Edition.

At pp. v. and lxxxv. of the Preface to the First Volume of the Syllabus I have pointed out some of Rymer’s omissions ; I need not therefore recapitulate them. These, however, are not the omissions alluded to by Dr. Clarke ; indeed he was not aware of them, consequently has not supplied them. The omissions to which he more especially refers are of all materials anterior to the year 1101.

(1.) Defectiveness of the publication, according to Dr. Clarke.

Dr. Clarke states that six hundred articles have been added to the first volume of the Record Edition of the Fœdera. The limits of this preface will not permit me to point out those which may properly be considered as coming within the original plan of the Fœdera. Neither shall I enter into conjectural reasoning with respect to such of them as, having been accessible to Rymer, were nevertheless, rejected by him; but as, in the Introduction to the Record Edition, it has been stated that it has been "satisfactorily proved to the commissioners that several important instruments have been discovered which were unknown to Rymer and his associates, and introduced into the Fœdera," it can hardly be deemed invidious if I investigate the claims which the new articles have to a place in the Record Commission Edition. The justification which I conceive to be due to Rymer demands that this should be done.

Six hundred articles in the first volume added by Dr. Clarke.

Number added
for the reign of William I.

Of these new instruments fourteen¹ belong to the reign of William I., but not one of them can be assigned to an earlier date than 1069; nor ought any of them to have been introduced into the Fœdera, unless the principle had been avowedly relaxed upon which such a work should be framed. In that case the letter which Pope Alexander II. sent to the King by Lanfranc on his returning to England from Rome might have been admitted, had the source from which it is derived been unimpeachable. It is however, only found in a collection of transcripts made for Archbishop Parker, in the sixteenth century, and was taken from a "Passionale" Martyrology, then in private hands.² Rymer would certainly have rejected it had he been collecting materials for the history of that reign, on the ground that it was not a matter of record. Eight out of the fourteen articles above mentioned are merely personal or local, and of the same character as numerous other instruments of that period; if these eight ought to have been inserted, then unquestionably all others of a like nature should have found a place there as well; a course which would have extended the number to one thousand at least. Four of the articles in question relate to the internal affairs of the kingdom; why they were selected, while numerous documents of a similar kind but much more interesting,

Three are taken from original instruments, viz., one in the Cottonian library, one in Westminster Abbey, and one in the Harleian collection of charters.

Four are taken from the "Chartæ Antiquæ," then in the Tower of London.

Three from the "Red Book" of the Exchequer.

One from a copy of an "Inspeximus" at Canterbury.

One from a manuscript at Cambridge.

Two from printed "Chronicles," one being a forged charter from Ingulfus; the other being extracts from Walsingham and Ordericus.

² Epistola Alexandri Papæ ad Wilhelmum conquisitorem, e quodam vetusto libro ecclesiæ Cantuar vocato Passionale S. Ignacii jam in manibus Mag. Bower. (Nasmith's Catal. of MSS. in C. C. C. C., No. 298, Art. 19.)

remain unnoticed, it is impossible to conceive. The fourteenth article is nothing but two short excerpts from the testament of William I., taken from annalists, and which ought not to have found a place in the Fœdera; one derived from a work written in the latter half of the fifteenth century, and the other from the Ecclesiastical History of Ordericus Vitalis.

For the reign of William II., only four have been inserted by Dr. Clarke in his edition,¹ and they are equally inappropriate, being only illustrative of private and local history. The same question again suggests itself: why were these selected, and others of the same character omitted?

Number added
for the reign of
William II.

From the above analysis it will be seen, that notwithstanding Dr. Clarke's condemnation of Rymer for not commencing the work with the Norman Conquest, he himself was unable to bring forward a single treaty or convention, or indeed any instrument which had a just claim to be inserted in the Fœdera, for the reigns of the first two Norman kings. Nor was he able to supply more than eighteen articles; whereas he might have found several hundreds of the same description, and of far more value and interest than those he has selected.

Dr. Clarke was not more successful in supplementing the diplomatic documents of the reign of Henry I. It is true he has added thirty-one articles to those which Rymer had collected, but not one of them is a treaty or convention. Out of the thirty-one in question, he has taken five from the printed chronicles of Brompton, Malmesbury, Eadmer, and Hoveden, and another printed book of modern authority.² Of the whole number he has only derived four from original documents; the others are of second-hand authority, although in two instances the originals are extant, from which the copies were taken. And here too, in those which he has collected he has not selected the best; but has allowed others of the same description but of more importance to remain unnoticed. Twenty-one out of the thirty-one³ are nothing but royal charters granting

Additions for
the reign of Henry I.

¹ Of these four, one only is published from an original document (MS. Cott. Augustus II., art. 53). Another is taken from the same library, and is referred to as "Galba C. iv. 157," a manifest error for Tiberius C. ix., art. 2 f. 45; it is a chartulary of Waltham Abbey, written three centuries after this reign. The other two are from copies in the archives of Rochester and Durham Cathedrals respectively.

² Archbishop Parker's "Antiquitates Britannicæ."

³ The sources of the 31 additional documents are the following:

Four from original instruments; in the British Museum three; in the Chapter House, Westminster, one.

Eleven from the Chartæ Antiquæ in the Tower. Of one of them two originals are estates or privileges to persons or communities, entirely of a private nature, and entirely alien to the Fœdera. They are of an interesting nature, no doubt, but the same may be said of almost every document of that period.¹

extant, containing an Anglo-Saxon text of the grant.

Two from the Red Book of the Exchequer.

One from a copy in an "Inspeximus" of Edward IV.

Seven from manuscripts; two at Cambridge, one at Rochester, four in the Cottonian collection in the British Museum.

Five from printed chronicles; as above-mentioned.

One writ (in Latin and Anglo-Saxon) from a printed book (Parker's "Antiquitates Britannicæ").

The only documents among these which have any just pretensions to insertion in the Fœdera are the correspondence with the See of Rome, and a letter from the King to the Archbishop of Canterbury upon the success of the Norman Expedition. These five documents are taken on the authority of printed chronicles alone; except one, which also exists in an ancient Cottonian MS. (Claudius A. I., art. 4), wherein may be found another instrument of equal importance, that has been overlooked by the editor.

¹ Added to this, Dr. Clarke has committed, at p. 8, an anachronism, which proves his incapacity to deal with diplomatic documents. He ought to have known that a charter in which King Henry styles himself "Dominus Hiberniæ" could not have been granted by Henry the First, in as much as Henry the Third was the first English monarch of that name who bore the title of "Lord of Ireland." The names of the witnesses to the charter, too, ought to have awakened his suspicion, if the title of the king even escaped his observation. Moreover, if he had taken the slightest trouble, he would have found the grant enrolled on the Charter Roll of the 33rd year of the reign of Henry III., and referred to in the Calendar printed by the Record Commission, with which he certainly ought to have been acquainted; but, instead of entering upon any research, he published the document from a printed book, in which it was erroneously assigned to the 33rd of Henry I., just 116 years before its proper date.

While on the subject of taking instruments from printed books, it may be mentioned that two other charters of this reign, said to be taken from MSS., have been extracted from printed books, as it is clear the MSS. were never consulted, for the rubric of one of those charters expressly ascribed it to the reign of Henry III. It would be unjust to Dr. Clarke not to state that he has corrected a serious anachronism committed by Rymer. At pp. 36, 37, Rymer printed a royal edict dated, as he believed, on the 26th of May in the 20th year of the reign of Henry II., whereas the document belonged to the 20th of Henry III.

Rymer ought not to have overlooked the fact that the charter was "given by the hand of the venerable father Ralph, Bishop of Chichester, our Chancellor," who unquestionably held that office from 1226 to 1244, and he might have seen the instrument enrolled on the Charter Roll of 20 Henry III., but having found a full copy of it in Liber B. of the Exchequer, he transcribed and printed it without due consideration. Dr. Clarke, however, as I have said, corrected Rymer's inaccuracy, and has printed the document in its right place in vol. i. p. 227, under the year 1236. While on the subject of anachronisms I may refer to another which Rymer has committed.

In his first volume he has printed an obligatory writing of the Lady Thalesia de Marchia relating to the delivery of the castle of Blankaford to Prince Edward, which bears the date "Secunda feria post festum Septem Fratrum," A.D. 1255. Rymer, not having reduced this date, has placed the document between those dated 13 and 18 October (i. 569), and left a blank against it in his chronological index; but the Dominical letter of that year being C, and the Feast of the Seven Martyred Brethren (10 July) falling on a Saturday, the true date is the 12th of July, which happened on the feria secunda or Monday following. It is therefore misplaced too late by 26 or 27 documents; and the same anachronism is retained by Dr. Clarke. One more, again, of Rymer's anachronisms may here be pointed out. A commission of James [IV.] dated at Edinburgh 19 July, anno

To the reign of Stephen, Dr. Clarke has added only eight articles. Three relate to the canonization of Edward the Confessor, which, though historical and interesting, are scarcely admissible into such a work as the Fœdera; four are royal charters of a local or personal nature; and the eighth is a papal bull in favour of Westminster Abbey.

For the reign of Henry II. fifty-four pieces were added by the new editor. Twenty-nine of these are certainly in unison with Rymer's plan; but the others are inconsistent with the design of the work, fourteen having been taken from printed chronicles,¹ three from published books,² and one from an insipid charter, several centuries later than the original document, which is still in existence.

Additions for
the reign of Henry II.

For the reign of Richard I. the new editor contributed thirty-eight articles; of these eleven are extracts from printed chronicles, two are taken from modern transcripts, one is an excerpt from an enrolment three centuries after the date of the document, and seventeen are derived from the rolls called "Cartæ Antiquæ," which were made up a full century after the charters had been granted, and which, moreover, do not come within the scope of Rymer's collection.

Additions for
the reign of Richard I.

I cannot conclude my remarks on the supplemented articles for the reign of Richard I. without calling especial attention to one of the pieces in question. It is a letter from the Sheekh ul Jibel, commonly known as the Old Man of the Mountain,—"Vetus de Monte."

Letter from the Old Man of the Mountain.

Rymer, at p. 71 of his first volume, has published, without any reference to the source whence he derived it, a letter from "the Old Man" to Leopold Duke of Austria, vindicating King Richard from the murder of the Marquis of Montferrat. Upon this document Dr. Clarke, in one of his reports to the Commissioners on the Public Records, makes the following remarks:—

"Before I finish my observations on those papers in the Fœdera, " which appear to have no higher authority than what they derive regni 22, authorizing Andrew, bishop of Murray, to renew peace and alliance with King Henry [VIII.] after the death of the late King Henry [VII.], his father, is placed by Rymer under the year 1427 (as if those princes were James I. of Scotland and Henry VI. of England respectively) in the stead of 1509, no fewer than 82 years before its proper date.

² Labbe's Collection of Councils, Becket's Epistles, and Selden's Titles of Honour.

“ from their insertion in that work, I beg leave to mention an “ instrument under the year 1192 (? 1193) professing to be a letter “ from “VETUS DE MONTE” the شيخ الجبل Sheekh ul Jibel (a chief
 “ of a branch of the Hassanian dynasty, who, with several thousands “ of his followers, were then settled at Mount Lebanon,) to Leopold “ Duke of Austria, vindicating Richard K. of England from the “ murder of the Marquis of Mountferrat. Most of our historians “ have been struck with the importance and curious nature of this “ instrument, and it has often been alleged in vindication of our “ national honour. On this account, I have regretted that Mr.
 “ Rymer did not produce his authority for its insertion; and I “ have endeavoured to supply the defect by inquiring on all hands “ for the original. But all my searches for such an original as the “ letter itself pretends to be derived from have been fruitless; and,
 “ with great deference to the judgment of His Majesty’s Commis“ sioners, I state my opinion that the instrument in question is a “ FORGERY, and is utterly unworthy of a place in the Fœdera.”

Dr. Clarke then proceeds to give his reasons for arriving at the conclusion that the letter is a forgery. They are perfectly logical, and are unanswerable. In another passage in the same Report, he speaks of “the inconsistency and absurdity of the Sheekh’s letter,” and describes it “as an ill-contrived forgery, which nothing but the “ignorance of the times could have kept concealed.” Yet, notwithstanding this condemnation, he actually prints another spurious letter on the same subject; on the ground that “it is certainly of “equal importance and authority with the preceding,” although he knew that neither would bear the test of diplomatic criticism.

Small worth of the additions made by Dr. Clarke.

Having brought this analysis down from the Norman Conquest to the end of the reign of Richard I., a period of 133 years, it would be a waste of the reader’s time, and a trial of his patience, to continue it further. One fact, however, must be pointed out; although 149 pieces have been added, yet only one of them is of primary importance;¹ and that one is derived from a printed book² and not from a record. Moreover, it had been designedly omitted by Rymer, because he had obtained from a record the ultimatum or final convention between the two parties, in the next year. While on the subject of rejection, it may be mentioned that the new editor, in more than one instance, has used some of Rymer's materials which he had collected (known as his Collectanea), but had afterwards rejected.

It may be generally stated, as will be pretty evident from the annexed note, that the pages devoted to the reigns from William I. to Henry III. are replete with errors and redundancies.¹

Errors in the Record Edition.

¹ In fifty articles taken indiscriminately from the First Volume, I have found more errors than I should care to count. I give a few of them for the purpose of affording the reader an opportunity of judging for himself whether the strictures I have passed on the Record Commission Edition are just or the reverse.

I.	91	1	A bull of Pope Alexander IV., A.D. 1250, printed as a bull of Alexander III., 1204. Rymer also fell into the error of assigning the bull to 1204.

I have now shown that the defectiveness with which Dr. Clarke charges Rymer is wholly without foundation.

Another of his charges against Rymer is, that he has printed unimportant documents.

(2.) Dr. Clarke's opinion of the unimportance of many of the documents printed by Rymer.

There can be no doubt that this charge is, to a certain extent, well founded; in so far as, Rymer has inserted many pieces in his collection which are not covered by the title of his work.

For instance, he prints the charter of the Empress Maude creating Milo de Gloucester Earl of Hereford, and assigns this remarkable reason for it: "Qua charta de creando comite antiquiorem non extare creditur." These words are omitted by Dr. Clarke, but it would have been still better had he omitted the charter itself, as it certainly does not deserve a place in the Fœdera. Rymer likewise prints a charter of Henry Fitz-Empress to Ranulph Earl of Chester, of a somewhat similar nature; and several other pieces, which, however they may illustrate trifling points in history, are not of sufficient authority to be published with original diplomata relating to public history and foreign policy; with which, in fact, they have nothing in common. As Rymer proceeds lower down, he undoubtedly introduces documents relating to domestic affairs much more liberally than he has done in his earlier volume, so that at length they become quite equal in number to those which relate to political and commercial matters. These documents, though highly interesting, are certainly inconsistent with the title and original design of the Fœdera, and Rymer may be justly censured for introducing such materials into his work.¹

The third charge urged against Rymer is, that the Fœdera "contains several documents which, however authentic, are perhaps improper to be published."² By this remark, Dr. Clarke means "papers and letters which disclose certain secrets of government, which it must be ever prudent to conceal, viz., the letters and communications of spies;" and he adds "that in such a work

(3.) His opinion of the impropriety of making public some of the documents printed by Rymer.

¹ As examples of the documents inserted by Rymer, which, though highly interesting, are out of place in such a work as a Fœdera, I here select some particular instances which may more effectually illustrate my meaning than a mere general description can do:—

Two precepts from the King to the Sheriff of Cambridgeshire, dated 7th November 1305 (vol. ii., p. 974), the one commanding him publicly to forbid tournaments, jousts, adventures, or lance-games (hastiludia) in the town of Cambridge, or within five miles thereof, according to the charter of Henry III. granted to the University, and the other commanding him to arrest Thomas Pecche and nine others, by name, who had proclaimed jousts in the town, though forbidden by the mayor. Five days afterwards (vol. ii., p. 975) the King, being at Chertsey, issued a like writ to the Sheriff of Oxfordshire, commanding him publicly to forbid the jousts proposed to be holden in Oxford, and to arrest any persons attempting the same. Again, on the 22nd of January 1306 (vol. ii., p. 980), a royal precept was issued to the Sheriff of Oxfordshire, commanding him publicly to forbid the holding of any tournaments, joustings, &c. in the town of Oxford or within the distance of 12 miles, for the sake of the quiet of the masters and scholars of the University (vol. viii., p. 363). John, son of Lord Grey of Warke, and Richard de Ledes, are to fight two Scotchmen at Carlisle. As pages could be filled with notices of such documents, it is unnecessary to instance others, especially when the "Analysis of the Fœdera" gives them in hundreds.

² Such as letters of congé d'élire, of royal assent, restitution of temporalities, licences of commendam, grants of pensions, proclamations on domestic matters, apprehension of felons, grants to private individuals.

“ the intelligence communicated by a spy should never be inserted, unless it tend to develop some strong or important fact which, without such assistance, would remain obscure, and destitute of its diplomatic causes and consequences.” What was his object in bringing this forward as a blemish in the Fœdera, I have not been able to discover. He certainly adduces no instance to justify his condemnation, and I am not aware of the existence of any.

He himself follows the plan which he had condemned.

These are the three great shortcomings in the Fœdera that have been alleged by Dr. Clarke; but it will be seen that, though he thus condemns, he errs in the self same points with a greater degree of latitude than his predecessor had ventured to assume.

I have already given Dr. Clarke's plan for carrying out a new edition; it will therefore be necessary to ascertain, if possible, whether he did carry out what he had proposed to the Commissioners, and to what extent he departed from it; and whether his original plan or his plan in its altered form was an improvement on that adopted by Rymer.

His knowledge of the Fœdera very limited when he was appointed editor.

When he was first nominated to superintend the publication of a new edition of the Fœdera, he had but a very limited knowledge of the nature of the work. He had derived his notions upon the subject (according to his own admission) from the Introduction to the “Calendars of the Ancient Charters,” &c., first published anonymously in 1772, and two years afterwards, as the work of Sir Joseph Ayloffe. This Introduction, which is generally attributed to Thomas Astle, keeper of the records in the Tower of London, contains a statement as follows:—

“ Soon after King William's and Queen Mary's accession to the throne, Mr. Harley, afterwards Earl of Oxford, formed a plan for printing, at the public expence, all leagues, treaties, alliances, capitulations, and confederacies, which had at any time been made between the Crown of England and other kingdoms, princes, and states; intermixed with such instruments and papers of state, as either more immediately related to them, or were curious and useful in illustrating the English History.”

In the preface to vol. i. I have shown that Mr. Harley had nothing whatever to do with the origin of the Fœdera, and that the whole credit is due to Lord Halifax and Lord Somers; I need not therefore repeat what I there advanced. It is sufficient to observe, that Dr. Clarke adopted the statement, or rather misstatement, attributed to Astle, and consequently laboured under the belief that all historical documents ought to have been inserted in the Fœdera; and, accordingly, without reflecting whither such a theory would lead him, pursued his way by the very path which Rymer had avoided, or rather followed, by necessity. Had Dr. Clarke fully carried out the plan thus ascribed to Harley, the Fœdera, instead of being contained in twenty, could not have been compressed into two hundred volumes.

The student, in consulting the Fœdera, could only have expected to find information relative to the diplomatic history of England, and its relations with foreign states. He would be somewhat surprised at finding such instruments as patents of creation,¹ summonses to Parliament, grants of offices, manors, and lands to private individuals, as well as to lay and ecclesiastical corporations; materials specifically and solely adapted for the illustration of domestic and local history. However unobjectionable might have been the publication of all original and authentic instruments useful for the illustration of English history, it is quite clear that the Fœdera was neither the place for such a publication, nor for the reprinting of documents already printed in several distinct publications, to which they peculiarly and properly belong. The extraction of whole pages from ancient annalists and historians, whose works had been in print many years before, is not the way in which Rymer's deficiencies ought to have been supplied.

Fœdera not confined to diplomatic instruments.

There cannot be a doubt that only such instruments as are of the clearest authenticity ought to have been admitted into a work of authority like that of the Fœdera; but if, for some good reason, it had been found necessary to make an exception to such a rule, the least that could be expected is that a candid statement should be given of the nature and degree of dubiousness attached to each article, in favour of which a violation of the general rule of admission had been allowed. But, incredible as it may seem, articles are inserted in the Record Edition of the Fœdera, invested with no other authority than that of printed books; and if a suspicion be entertained by a student as to their trustworthiness, he will not find in the Fœdera a solution of his doubt, but is sent back to the very book about which he requires further information.

Pieces taken from printed books.

It may be urged in defence of Dr. Clarke, that although the documents he has inserted do not properly belong to the class for which the Fœdera was intended, yet there is scarcely one of them which, in relation to some particular subject, does not tend to the illustration of some point of English history. This is doubtless true; but it must be remembered that such a collection was never intended by the originators of the Fœdera, which was to resemble Leibnitz's great work. If such a course had been fully carried out by Dr. Clarke, the work would have been swamped by matter wholly irrelevant to its object. From one single source alone (the Chancery Rolls) there could be furnished no less than nine times the number of similar articles—articles, too, with pretensions quite equal, and in many cases far superior in interest and importance, to the greater portion of the like documents which have been added in the Record Commission Edition. Still further, if private collections, as well as the other public archives, were made available for instruments of a similar kind, the additions might rapidly be increased full fifty-fold. It, therefore, cannot but be admitted that a lamentable defect of judgment was evinced in printing a new edition of the Fœdera, on a plan so extensive, or rather so unlimited, as to require, if fully carried out, at least ten volumes for one, to complete the period embraced in the work. But this is not the only inconvenience; by extending the original design beyond its prescribed bounds, the editors have led the student to believe that no other documents similar to those it comprises remain unpublished, whereas their name is legion. Speaking of the new matter the editors¹ say, "Many important articles, upwards of six hundred in the first volume, have been added under different reigns; all either of consequence in themselves, or necessary as connecting links to complete the history of transactions for the times to which they refer." This may be true as to their being of consequence in themselves, but the reader cannot fail to observe, that nearly one half of the six hundred are either reprints from other works, or are of a character inappropriate, or at least unnecessary, for insertion in such a work, and, moreover, are not new to the historical scholar. It could hardly have been contemplated by those who sanctioned the new edition of the Fœdera (however they may have wished that work to be conducted on a plan sufficiently extensive) that it should embrace all instruments relating to foreign ¹ It should be stated that the first three parts of the work, i. e., to the end of the reign of Edward II., were edited by Dr.

Most of the new matters useful in illustration of English history.

¹ Rymer unfortunately had set the example, by publishing the charter of the creation of Milo de Gloucester as Earl of Hereford; but he assigned a reason for it, which Dr. Clarke suppressed in the new edition.

Clarke and Mr. Frederic Holbrooke; the remaining three parts by Mr. John Cayley and Mr. Holbrooke.

ecclesiastical and political, as well as domestic ecclesiastical and political transactions; if such were really their intention, it must then be presumed that they could not have been aware, or did not sufficiently consider, that, in place of every single volume of Rymer's own edition, the materials of a new edition, selected in conformity with such a design, would have required, as I have already said, a publication of more than ten volumes at least.

It may be seen, by Dr. Clarke's various reports, that at first it was only intended by him to add such documents to the new edition as had either been unattainable by Rymer, or brought to light since his time. This intention seems, however, to have been abandoned at an early moment. If it be permitted to hazard a conjecture on the subject, it may be inferred that, in spite of the intention of its being kept within the limits of the original design (namely, that of merely adding such documents as were improperly omitted by Rymer, or were inaccessible to him), the new edition has been suffered to perpetrate, and to a still larger extent, the defects and errors found in the first edition, through the editors "having, as they admit, through hurry or precipitancy, permitted many things to enter into the great mass, some of which are of little, others of minor consequence;" that the plan in fact proposed to, and authorised by the Commissioners, by its very extensiveness, has failed in the attempt to carry it into execution. In this case, the best apology that can be suggested may be—the peculiar difficulties incidental to a work of such laborious execution as the Fœdera—difficulties not to be overcome by any but those who have made record erudition their peculiar study, and who would not have failed to see, at a moment's notice, the suicidal ambition of Dr. Clarke's design.

Dr. Clarke in the first volume intended only to print documents unattainable by Rymer.

Apology suggested for the course pursued by Dr. Clarke.

We come now to the consideration whether the instruments inserted in the new edition of the Fœdera, by way of addition to those contained in the old, ought not to have been of a different nature and of a more important description. It is obvious that one of the editor's chief duties before he went to press was clearly this,—to search or to cause to be thoroughly searched, every repository in England for all inedited matter proper to be introduced into the new edition.

The new pieces introduced in the Record edition are not of sufficient importance to justify their insertion.

There can be no hesitation in admitting that it must have been no easy task for an editor, quite ignorant of the work he had to perform, to find out and select only such instruments as were proper for insertion in the new edition of the Fœdera, when for several years after the commencement of his undertaking (owing mainly to the fact of research not being made in the quarters to which it ought to have been directed), the chief part of the supposed new matter with which he was furnished turned out to be either copies of articles already inserted, or documents of a nature wholly unsuitable to the work. In his dilemma, he appears to have adopted the somewhat singular rule "of rejecting nothing " whatever but duplicates, and of admitting every atom of new " matter, however inapplicable to the purpose!" This at once accounts for there being so many articles in the new edition unworthy of a place in that publication, to the exclusion of numerous important and necessary documents, and for the reprinting of documents in the work which had already been printed.

By the injudicious obtrusion of some instruments into the Fœdera, the student is exposed, as already suggested, to the liability of entertaining false expectations: until he has learned better, he naturally believes that all the instruments to be obtained from our archives, of a particular description, have been transcribed and printed in the new edition of the Fœdera. That such inferences have been drawn even from Rymer's own work is positive and convincing, and proof thereof may be seen in the preface to the Acta Regia.

Whether such classes of instruments ought to have been allowed to occupy any space at all in the pages of the Fœdera is a question that, perhaps, might admit of some difference of opinion; but upon examining the Introduction to the new edition no mention whatever is there to be found, from first to last, of any design to extend, except in point of time, the limits of the plan originally adopted by Rymer. That plan only comprehended " All leagues, treaties, alliances, capitulations, and confederacies, " which had, at any time, been made between the Crown of Eng- " land, and other kingdoms, provinces, and states; intermixed " with such instruments and papers of state, as either more " immediately related to them, or were curious and useful in illus- " trating the English history."

Reasons urged
by the editors for a new edition.

Moreover, in those reports which preceded the new edition, and urged the necessity of its publication, not a word is said about enlarging the scope of the original plan. The reasons suggested in support of the propriety of the undertaking are principally of a character intended to magnify the general importance and utility of such a work, and to advocate its necessity on account of the alleged scarcity of former editions ; and in a recital of recounting the particulars in which the new edition excelled its predecessors, its specified improvements are confined to—

Firstly, the extension of its limits, both to an earlier and to a later period of time.

Secondly, to the verification of the old materials and the addition of others within the same reigns, all either of consequence in themselves, or necessary as connecting links to complete the history of state transactions for the times to which they refer.

Thirdly, to the chronological arrangement with reference to the repository in which each article is to be found.

Fourthly, to the typographical execution of the whole.

It is true that the editors of the Record Commission Edition greatly extended the field of their operations. They commenced their researches for new matter at the Tower of London, beginning with a class of rolls then preserved there, called the “Cartæ Antiquæ.” Had they been acquainted with diplomacy, they would have spared themselves that trouble, inasmuch as they would have known that no documents which, by any possibility, could come under the denomination of Fœdera or Acta Publica would be found on those rolls. From the “Cartæ Antiquæ” they claim to have selected seventy-two instruments, but instead of copying them from the rolls themselves they merely transcribed them from excerpts made by Sir Simonds D’Ewes, and preserved in the British Museum. Beyond ascertaining the fact that they were preserved there, they never even consulted the series in the Tower of London.¹

How the Editors carried out their operations.

This was not the only error the editors committed at the Tower. They neglected to avail themselves to any extent of the Miscellaneous Records, a valuable series of documents which were unknown to Rymer (having been discovered since his time by Mr. Samuel Lysons, in the White Tower, where they had lain in chaotic filth and dust since the time of Prynne). They had nevertheless been furnished with an index of these documents, prepared with great

Their neglect of the Miscellaneous Records in the Tower of London.

¹ In one of his reports, Dr. Clarke, in mentioning his new materials, states, “I include the Apographa of the Chartæ Antiquæ in the Tower, from which I have extracted many important documents, but which, owing to the sickness and death of Dr. Steinhauer, (one of his assistants,) I have not yet been able to collate with the originals. This, however, I hope to do, as soon as I get an assistant.” Dr. Steinhauer did not copy the extracts from the Cartæ Antiquæ in the Tower, but from transcripts in the British Museum, and those transcripts were printed without any collation with the Cartæ Antiquæ Rolls in the Tower.

care and industry, and yet, because some of these most valuable and curious letters, written to our sovereigns by foreign states, are undated, and relate to matters of a private nature, they were rejected, except in some few instances. This is the more extraordinary when it is remembered that nearly all the new matter supplied by the editors was derived from sources not of record, and relates wholly to private matters; and further, that the insertion of letters of this very kind was essential to the completeness of what professed to be a collection of "Litteræ et cujuscumque generis Acta Publica inter Reges Angliæ et alios quosvis principes."

House, Westminster.

In the Chapter House, at Westminster, before its contents were removed to the Public Record Office, were preserved some of the most important instruments in the Fœdera. The Chapter House was the principal royal depository for state papers, and where Rymer chiefly worked. The new editors of the Fœdera did not even there take advantage of the facilities they possessed (although the secretary of the Record Commission was the head of the Chapter House), but neglected many things which they ought to have inserted.

Their work at Westminster
Abbey.

In Westminster Abbey, Dr. Clarke states that "some curious instruments were found belonging to the Norman reigns;" two only, however, appear in his printed text, and even they ought not to have had a place there.

Their work at the British Museum.

At the British Museum the new editors exercised but little discretion. They copied and printed documents from comparatively modern transcripts, while the originals which were in existence¹ were never consulted.² They did the same at the Bodleian Library, by printing Carte's manuscripts instead of resorting to the originals.

At the Bodleian
Library.

At Cambridge.

At Cambridge, again, documents were selected from transcripts instead of from originals.

¹ The volumes at the British Museum, which the editors profess to have examined, were nearly all the "Collectanea" of Sir Symonds D'Ewes. They do not seem to have valued the Harleian Collection, which they declare to be "a barren desert, affording, so far as yet examined, little of importance for such a work as the Fœdera."

² The charter (dated 27th Jan. 1216, and entitled "Terræ et libertates in Hibernia, Thomæ de Galweya concessæ," printed at p. 140 of the first volume, is taken from a transcript on paper bound up in the Cottonian MS., Titus B. xi. f. 29 (30), which is subscribed Concordat cum Recordis, and is nothing more than an office copy Ex Rotulo cartarum de anno decimo regis Johannis, made at least five hundred years after the date of the charter, which is as incorrectly copied as it has been inaccurately printed. A charter of Henry III. granting a piece of land, in vico illo qui dicitur Newstrete, to Ralph Bishop of Chichester, is printed at p. 193 from a transcript in the Lansdowne Collection, while the enrolment of the instrument is on the Charter Roll of the 13th of Henry III. Many similar instances of this want of care in the Commission editors could be produced, if necessary.

At the College of Arms Dr. Clarke says that, from a manuscript in the Library there, "an authentic copy of the will of Henry the Third was obtained." How authentic this copy is, may be judged by the fact, that it is a most inaccurate copy from a very inaccurate transcript among the miscellaneous papers of William Botoner, alias Worcestre, the antiquary of Bristol, who flourished in the reigns of Henry VI. and Edward IV., not less than two centuries after the date of the original.¹

At the College of Arms.

This notice of the shortcomings of the editors of the new edition might be continued to an extraordinary length, were it my object merely to censure the results of their labours.

Dr. Clarke has condemned Rymer, and not without justification, for introducing excerpts from printed chronicles into a collection professing to contain only original documents preserved in the royal archives. At p. cxxx of my preface to the first volume of the Syllabus a plea in exculpation has been offered for Rymer; but that which has been advanced in his favour can scarcely be brought forward for Dr. Clarke. Not satisfied with transgressing but a little, he carried his trespasses to a much greater extent than Rymer had ventured upon. It is true, that he informs the Commissioners that he had found it expedient to follow the course Rymer had pursued. He says, "To make the work as complete as possible, several instruments in Spelman, Hickes, Wilkins, Thorpe's 'Registrum Roffense,' Thurloe's and Stafford's State Papers, and the Corps Diplomatique, should be carefully examined. The reason why I recommend an examination of these printed works is this: I suppose that many of the originals have perished, and that the printed copies are perfectly authentic. Mr. Sanderson, in the last volume of the Fœdera, has availed himself frequently of the papers of Mr. Secretary Thurloe. Several articles will be found among these writers which properly belong to the Fœdera, and should be united to the supplement or incorporated in the new edition, should the proposal meet with the approbation of the right honourable the Commissioners."

Excerpts from printed chronicles.

Having obtained the sanction of the Commissioners, or rather, not having been forbidden to imitate the example of Rymer and Sanderson, Dr. Clarke forthwith acted upon this silent permission,

Dr. Clarke does not seem to have been aware that this document had been minutely printed in both editions of Hearne's Liber Niger Scaccarii (vol. ii. 532-534), as an appendix to Botoner's Annals, published from the same manuscript.

and rushed forward in the very pursuit which he had himself condemned.¹ That such a proceeding could have been contemplated by the Commissioners on Public Records cannot be credited, nor can it be supposed that, had they thought so large a proportion of the early supplementary matter was to be derived from printed books, they would have consented to the proposal for a new edition, for the reason "that several important instruments had been discovered, " unknown to Rymer, and that it would be a matter of great " importance to begin the work with the Norman Invasion, instead " of the first year of the reign of Henry I." It would be absurd to suppose that the matter taken from chronicles could have been unknown to Rymer, seeing that Dr. Clarke had himself called attention to the fact that those very sources had been largely used by him.

Excerpts from printed books.

Notwithstanding the allusion to Spelman, Hickes, Thorpe, and others, the editors have drawn but little from their works. They have reprinted only one article from Spelman, and two may be traced to Thorpe, though they make it appear that they were taken from manuscripts. They have also resorted to the "Acta inter Boni-facium VIII. et Philippum Pulchrum," the "Archæologia," the "Epistolæ S. Thomæ," "Labbe's Concilia," "Histoire de Bretagne," "by Lobineau," "Parker's Antiquitates Britannicæ," "Selden's Titles of Honour," and "Spelman's Concilia," besides the ancient chronicles. Nor ought the fact to be omitted, that to choose the best editions of these works was no matter of concern to the editors. The foreign reprint of the "Scriptores post Bedam" was used in preference to the original edition published by Sir Henry Savile in 1596, though the reprint is well known to be full of errors. The foreign edition of Walsingham has also been employed, to the exclusion of that published by Archbishop Parker in 1574, which, like the original edition of Savile's work, far excels in beauty and correctness the cheaper German edition. Not even in the case of Selden's Titles of Honour was the best edition used, but a copy of a copy,—the reprint in the edition of Selden's works, collected and published by Dr. Wilkins. Surely, if the loss of the original record is to be supplied from a printed chronicle, no pains ought to have been spared to obtain the best edition.

¹ In his report of the 15th March 1810, Dr. Clarke states, "I have also made considerable progress in examining our " ancient historians and annalists, marking

" everything for extraction that may lead " to complete the plan of the Fœdera and " fulfil the intention of his Majesty's " Commissioners."

I have now sufficiently shown that the extension of the limits of the Record Commission Edition of the Fœdera is a failure, so far as the early part of Dr. Clarke's proposition is concerned.

The extension of the limits of the Fœdera a failure.

One of the points strongly urged by Dr. Clarke in favour of his new edition was the great inaccuracy of former ones. He is particularly pointed in his censures upon George Holmes, who was employed to superintend the second edition, and goes so far as to assert that "he had sufficient proof that Holmes did not collate the " papers at the Tower with any tolerable degree of care, and that " many omissions had been discovered on a re-collation, not of single " words only, but of whole sentences."

The verification of the materials printed by Rymer, and the additions of others within the same reigns.

This severe censure upon Holmes would better have been spared, for that laborious antiquary certainly did collate with the originals the articles which were extracted from the muniments at the Tower. It is true that some instances of want of care are to be detected in Holmes' edition ; but the example pointed out by Dr. Clarke is apparently the only one he had discovered, and that belongs to the period anterior to the time of King John, the reign with which Holmes' collation appears to have commenced. He printed and published the errors he had found in a separate form.

The censure upon Holmes.

Any one who has had occasion to consult the Record Commission edition of the Fœdera must have remarked that in the first part of the first volume the editors have adhered to the original edition, however faulty, and have perpetuated all the errors by reprinting the documents as they occur, without having recourse to the original records. It must, however, be stated that throughout the greater portion of the second part of the first volume, as well as the second volume, the records themselves have been consulted, and many errors have been removed from those divisions of the work ; but the instruments reprinted in the remaining volumes of the new edition seem to have been passed through the press without any collation or comparison with the original records. In stating this I refer more especially to those portions of the work taken from the muniments then at the Tower of London. It is but fair, however, to Dr. Clarke to remark that he states "it was not thought needful " to collate the records at the Tower, because this task had already " been done by Holmes," though it cannot but strike us as somewhat remarkable that in making this admission he forgets that he had charged Holmes with carelessness in performing the very same task. He had previously said that "the papers from the Tower " were in a more incorrect state than those taken from any other

The errors in the first volume of the Record Commission edition.

Errors fewer in the second volume.

Increased in the other volumes.

Why the records at the Tower were not collated.

“ office,” and that “ many had been copied with a most reprehensible neglect.”

The chronological arrangement in the Record Commission Edition with a reference to the repository in which each article is to be found.

Dr. Clarke¹ says that “ the chronological arrangement, which was extremely defective in all former editions, is with great care and labour reduced to consistency and order [in his edition]. In many instances instruments were both misdated and misplaced. In a variety of cases where articles have been dated by calends, they have been reckoned as current days of the month, instead of being reckoned backwards ; thus several have got into a wrong month, some into a wrong year, and some into a different reign. A new computation has therefore been made in reference to the date of every article in the first and second volumes. First, by the mode now generally adopted by European states ; secondly, the ancient Roman method by calends, nones, and ides ; and thirdly, by the mode adopted in many instances by the moveable feasts of the Church, saints’ days, their eves, octaves, &c. It must be allowed that in several respects it was difficult to avoid such mistakes at the commencement of the work, and subsequent editors certainly paid no attention to this circumstance. The necessity of examining everything chronologically seems never to have occurred to them ; and on this account it is difficult to speak of their acts at all times with respect.”

Chronological errors.

That considerable chronological miscalculation is to be found in the original edition must be admitted, and I have, in the preface to the first volume, p. lxxxv, exposed some of the anachronisms which Rymer has committed ; but Dr. Clarke, having thus freely condemned his predecessors, ought to have taken care to preclude the possibility of any objections of the same kind being brought against his own work ; nevertheless, he has himself, in that respect, committed even more glaring faults than Rymer ; for not only has he allowed Rymer’s errors to remain uncorrected, but he has fallen into such errors as Rymer never made ; for instance, he has reckoned the pontifical years as if they were concurrent and co-expiring with the ecclesiastical years, and the days of the month recorded in the form of the Roman calendar have been usually misreckoned.

Dr. Clarke’s complaint against Rymer.

Dr. Clarke makes another very extraordinary complaint against Rymer for following a chronological arrangement. He writes, “ With respect to Rymer’s arrangement of his materials, it is only necessary to observe that he has been directed by chro-

“ nology alone. His kings, of course, follow each other in chronological order, and the documents produced under each reign succeed to each other in the same way, without the slightest attempt at classification, a very few instances excepted, or any other arrangement than that of the successive years of each reign, and the consecutive months and days of the month of each year. Whoever, therefore, in consulting the Fœdera wishes to find out an Act of a particular description and other Acts of the same kind must, if he know not the particular year in which it occurs, run down the whole reign in its chronological series, which must necessarily occupy a considerable portion of time, as many cases must occur in which the indices will afford little or no assistance.” Rymer’s chronological arrangement, which has thus been condemned, is one of the great advantages of his plan. Surely Dr. Clarke must have forgotten the fact that events do not occur in classes, but chronologically. Had Rymer formed his work on the system advocated and adopted by Rapin in his Acta Regia, the Fœdera would have been a mass of confusion. Rapin’s object was to show the relation in which the Acts in the Fœdera stand to the events which occurred, and to illustrate the one by the other. In doing this he cut up the history of England into strips, and classified his subjects under different heads.

Another of the charges brought against Rymer’s selection, is that “ there appears too great a proportion of ecclesiastical matters in the collection, many of which are of little importance as facts, and are never likely to be resorted to as precedents.” Then, in an apologetic strain, Dr. Clarke adds : “ This may be deemed an imperfection, but when we take into consideration the great influence claimed and exerted over England by the Church of Rome in those early times, particularly from the 12th to the 16th century, we need not be surprised at the multitude of ecclesiastical Acts which occur in the Fœdera. The royal authority in those days was only an expressive echo of the papal power ; and the State was scarcely seen or acknowledged but in its vassalage to the Romish Church. If we consider the whole mass of our ancient history, the immense body of our early records, with all our political relations and connexions, even from the 6th to the 16th century, what do we behold ? Almost every act of the State begun under the influence, continued under the direction, and issued in the aggrandizement of a foreign papal hierarchy, Thank God, those days of darkness and disgrace are now ended, Rymer condemned for an excess of ecclesiastical matter.

Dr. Clarke’s apology for Rymer.

“ and the State is blessed and adorned with a pure Church and a Protestant Government, but the historian of those times must necessarily recall to view the sullenly departed images of this long-prevalent, wide-wasting, and substantial evil. This apology Candor produces in favour of Mr. Rymer : had he not inserted such instruments in his collection as those referred to above, how meagre must his work have been, through the principal part of the period it embraces. But as it is generally known and sufficiently understood, it is a question for the consideration of the right honourable the Commissioners, whether the same general and indiscriminate admission shall be granted in a supplement and continuation to documents of a similar complexion.”

Censure of Rymer for not naming his sources.

Dr. Clarke has made another charge against Rymer, and certainly not without just cause ; he shows that of the eighty-six documents printed by Rymer, anterior to the reign of John, he has only mentioned the source of thirty whence derived. Dr. Clarke has, much to his credit, discovered the sources of about twenty-eight of those left undescribed by Rymer. In Appendix, p. xxxvii, I have given a list of those left as unknown by Dr. Clarke, wherein it will be seen that I have been fortunate enough to find out the sources of nearly all that were left by him as unknown.

Enough, indeed I fear more than enough, minute criticism has now been expended upon the Record Commission Edition, to show that it has not answered the expectations that it raised, that a new edition was inconsistent with the recommendation of the House of Commons in 1800, that the design and nature of the Fœdera were mistaken by the new editors, and that the important papers referred to by the Committee of the House of Commons have not been published or collected.

Expensiveness of the Commission Edition.

The expensiveness of the Record Commission Edition calls for a passing remark ; but it cannot be doubted that the object the Commissioners had in view of rendering the work more generally known, accessible at home and vendible on the continent, was subverted by the great cost of the work. Foreigners of distinction and many book collectors for long knew nothing of the Record Commission Edition, and, when it was brought to their attention, were astonished at its magnitude, stopping short, as it does, in the middle of the reign of Richard II., and deterred from purchase at its price.

Many other objections could be fully substantiated ; but sufficient has now been shown to prove that the Record Edition by no means reaches the estimate that Dr. Clarke formed of it, or at all verifies his fond prediction, that in his edition "the Fœdera would be at its standard for ever."

The printing Record Edition was suspended by the Record Commissioners when it had reached the 172nd page of the 7th part or volume, on the ground of it being "deemed advisable to institute " an accurate inquiry into the expediency or in expediency of continuing the work to the final completion of the plan projected by " by Dr. Clarke, and on which it has been hitherto conducted."

Suppression of the Record
Commission
Edition.

The sheets of the unfinished volume have lately been published, by order of the present Master of the Rolls, Lord Romilly, as it was deemed advisable to insert an abstract of the matter in the Syllabus.¹

The censure on the Record Commission Edition of the Fœdera, which I have felt myself bound, though unwillingly, thus to commit to print, may seem to come with but an ill grace from one labouring in the same field of literature; but it was imperative upon me that I should remove the undue stigma of negligence and incompetence from Rymer, who has done so much for the spread of historical knowledge, not only in England but throughout the civilized

Apology for these strictures
on the Commission Edition.

¹ When the work was suspended, six large volumes, or rather three volumes, each in two parts, had appeared, and a fourth, in reality the seventh, was at press, 172 pages of which having been printed, carrying the work down to the year 1383, during the 6th year of the reign of Richard II.

The history of the suspension of the work demands a few words:

The attention of Mr. C. P. Cooper, the secretary to the then Record Commission, having been drawn to the Fœdera by an able article by the late Sir Harris Nicolas in his "Observations on Historical Literature," and afterwards by a paper in the "Gentleman's Magazine" for July 1834, an inquiry was directed by the Commissioners on Public Records, and I was appointed to make a report on the subject, which I accordingly did. My report (the substance of the greater portion of which has been embodied in this preface) was placed in the hands of Mr. W. H. Black to amplify, for the purpose of being published as Mr. Cooper's Report on the Fœdera. A portion of this extended report was set up in type, but not "worked," and the types were distributed in the year 1836 before a single page was printed; a copy of it, however, is preserved at the Rolls House, and I have not scrupled to avail myself of any information it contains which was not embraced in my own report. It would be unjust to Mr. Black not to state that his additions to my report have exhausted the subject of the inaccuracies of the Fœdera. Many of his criticisms, however, are in some instances too hypercritical to be noticed here, or to be serviceable in the inquiry on which I have been engaged. Since writing the above, Mr. Black's death has been announced, and I cannot lose this opportunity of expressing my deep regret, which many others will doubtless share, at this unexpected loss. He was a man that could ill be spared from the world of letters, especially that branch of it on which he was a recognized authority. His mind was richly stored with archaic learning and palæographical knowledge, which he was always alike ready to impart to the youthful student and to give to the world at large.

world. The Fœdera is a work of which this nation has every reason to be proud, for with all its blemishes—and what work is faultless—it has no rival in its class. “It is,” as it has been well described, “a proud monument to the glory of the British nation, “and to the enlarged views and munificence of those sovereigns “under whose auspices it was projected, conducted, and published.” In my animadversions no personal reflection is in the slightest degree intended to be made on Dr. Clarke, as a scholar. He occupies one of the highest places in the range of that kind of learning upon which his well-earned fame rests, and it is not probable that it will ever be cast into the shade or fall into oblivion. My desire has been to rescue Rymer from undue blame and unfounded disparagement, not to depreciate the talents of Dr. Clarke.

The Syllabus shows the diversified nature of the contents of the collection much more effectually than any long dissertation upon them, and the Index will point to many matters of interest that might otherwise escape attention; but as its extent is so great (being nearly as large as a volume of text), it has been deemed advisable to publish it in a separate volume, together with some other matter germane to the subject of the Fœdera in the strictest sense; which will be found, it is believed, to be of some, perhaps considerable, historical value.

At the commencement of my Preface to the First Volume, I stated that, to the present Master of the Rolls, Lord Romilly, the formation and publication of this Syllabus is due. From an early period he had been conversant with the contents of the Fœdera, and, knowing its historical value, frequently deplored that a work from which so much real information was to be derived was not better known and appreciated. It was his knowledge that the Fœdera contained hardly any documents derived from foreign archives that induced him to commence the grand collections he is now amassing from the archives of France, Spain, Venice, Brussels, Vienna, and Rome, and making them public through the medium of calendars. The reader need hardly be reminded that Lord Romilly’s zeal would have produced but little fruit had he not been most liberally supported by the Government by placing funds at his disposal for the great national undertaking.

¹ It was taken from an ancient MS. in the Colbertine Collection, which is now in the National Library at Paris. It stands first among the "Omissa" of Rymer's First Volume, p. 89.

² This Bull was incorrectly printed by Dr. Clarke (p. 91) as a Bull of Innocent III., but he has reprinted it at p. 274, not remembering that he had already inserted it.

³ On Rymer's margin is written "Ex Autogr.," which mistake is corrected among the Errata thus "Pat. 34 H. 3." But though the right reference is set down in the margin of the new edition, the wrong one is preserved in the "Index Chronologicus," with the usual note attending these unknown sources.

I have prepared a List of Dates, as they occur in the Record Edition of the Fœdera, which have been corrected in the Syllabus. This will be given in the next volume containing the General Index and other subsidiary matter.

CHRONOLOGICAL TABLE

OF THE

REGNAL YEARS of the KINGS of ENGLAND from the NORMAN CONQUEST to the END of the REIGN of EDWARD THE THIRD, corresponding with the Dominical Years, both Historical and Legal.

THE written acts of the Sovereigns of Europe generally bear the date of the Regnal year of the potentate to which they severally belong ; but as such dates would have been very inconvenient for reference, and no useful purpose would have been effected by retaining them in the Syllabus, they have all been reduced to the Dominical Era, as being the more useful and common computation. To assist the Historical student, for whose especial benefit the Syllabus has been compiled, the following table is offered to show at once the correspondence between the Regnal year of each King of England and the Dominical year, whether it be historical or legal, civil or ecclesiastical. It has not been deemed necessary to construct tables of the Regnal years of Foreign Sovereigns, as not more than one-sixth of the documents in the Fœdera originated out of this country, and such tables would have required five times the space now filled. A Table of Contemporary Sovereigns will, however, be useful, and is given immediately after the Regnal years of the Kings of England. Each date has been reckoned according to the historical or common era commencing on the 1st of January, and not according to the Civil, Ecclesiastical, and Legal Era commencing on the 25th of March. By this latter computation all dates between the 1st of January and 25th of March are one year earlier than the historical or common year ; for instance, the period between the 1st of January and the 24th of March 1371 in the Legal year is in the year 1372 of the historical era. Again, King Edward the Third came to the throne on the 25th of January 1326 of the Legal, Civil, and Ecclesiastical Era, while according to the historical or common era it was the 25th of January 1327. Queen Elizabeth died on the 24th of March 1602 of the Legal, Civil, and Ecclesiastical year, but according to the historical or common era on the 24th of March 1603.
